

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, July 22, 1869.

The opportunities for Pomological Solecism which the green fruiterers who ply their trade on the Broadway curbstones provide, are being freely made use of, and cholera morbus must be expected to be on the increase until the green fruit shall have become mellow. This will not be for some weeks, and consequently the cholera morbus people will have it all their own way until then. They have the matter in their own hands. Both the cholera and yellow fever seem kindly disposed towards the city this year. Hitherto they have tapped but lightly at our doors, and have not insisted upon coming in and making themselves at home. We are fervently hoping that the season has gone by for cholera to slay its thousands and yellow fever its tens of thousands. The Board of Health, to be sure, are doing all in their power to lay the city subject to an epidemic. The streets in certain quarters are choked up with garbage, and wherever the tenement-house element prevails, there you find also the elements of contagious disease. But although the weather of the past few days has been eminently favorable to contagion, the deaths—even of infants from cholera infantum—have been few, and less than the usual percentage of funerals have visited the cemeteries and burial grounds.

City Hall Park is going to be reclaimed. The greater portion of it is at present an arid-looking plain fenced in by iron rails, around which are posted the vendors of penny songs, ice-cream one cent a glass and two spoons at that, sorfello-colored lemonade, Washington pie, cholera-producing waffles, oyster soup, seaweed tobacco, and other delicacies. Ropers-in, bummers, loafers, and the dregs from gambling-hells infest it by day, and abominable creatures a shade lower than all these convert it into a silent, furtive pandemonium at night. Let such disport themselves while they can, for the end of these things is at hand. Simultaneously with the commencement of the new post office, an effort is to be made to reclaim the City Hall Park. The long-contemplated plaza is to be built. Decent brick is to pave the parched and colorless area that now extends south of the old City Hall, and handsome plots of green, fringed with flower-borders, are to interstice the space between the old and the new buildings. All trees of respectable growth are to be retained, and the idea is to make it at the present demoralized City Hall Park one of the most beautiful and useful spots in the city. Of course, Mayor Hall will be permitted to fire off cannon there whenever any of his friends go yachting, or any other event of national importance occurs.

A Frightened Editor. Yesterday afternoon, as one of the assistant editors connected with one of the smaller journals of the city was placidly eating his dinner at the St. Nicholas Hotel—the journalist in question has a small private fortune, and therefrom, and not from his salary, defrays the expenses of these palatial repasts—he was suddenly paralyzed by beholding fixed upon him the eyes of an immense woman sitting opposite. The immense woman was a blonde, florid in feature, with broad, blue, beaming eyes, and a profusion of fine brown hair cut short, and owing its delicate golden glints to the profane touch of no aured mixture. Warm as the weather was, she wore a tight-fitting velvet dress, which set off her symmetrically rounded flesh to the best advantage. The journalist in question is a small man, a weak man, a nervous man. Consequently he may be excused for choking over his soup, and catching his breath at the suspicion that the voluminously-fashioned Germanic beauty opposite him boded him no good with her fixed look. It suddenly occurred to him that in the journal he represented he had penned unnumbered editorials reflecting bitterly upon one Madame Ankeke, the living image of this velvet-robed Amazon. To swallow another mouthful of dinner under these circumstances was impossible. In vain he tried to "bolt" that plate of soup, in vain addressed himself to the fish, or essayed to disport his palate among the ocean of edibles that lay spread out before him. Digestion and appetite had dissolved partnership, and he was just about to rise and precipitately retreat, when the lips of the female opponent, and from them issued these remarkable words, in the most nasal of Yankee drawls:—"Blest if that ain't our old neighbor Sam—Hacoor der dew, Sam?" and a stalwart arm was stretched across the crowded table.

Sam had the presence of mind to retain his seat and accept the proffered hand. Recognition came to him finally, and in the broad, jolly features he had taken for Madame Ankeke's, he discovered those of an old flame of his whom he had not seen for many years, and whom a change for the better, in circumstances, had helped to make a lady of, and removed from her native home in Massachusetts. The fright was salutary to the journalist, however. The lady's resemblance to the famous Madame Ankeke is wonderfully striking; and henceforth he will abuse that lady no more in his newspaper.

Dramatic Memoranda. The report that Barney Williams and wife are soon going to San Francisco, and thence probably to Australia, is true. Barney, I think—not that my opinion is of any moment, however—is foolish for doing so. He lives elegantly at Bath; his household, consisting of his wife, his child (a lovely little girl), his mother and himself, and six or seven servants. He has a fortune of nearly half a million of dollars, and is surrounded by everything calculated to make a man happy—even though the man be an Irishman. The fact is, however, he wishes to make the "nearly half a million" quite that amount, and so compete with his professional brother, William Wheatley, who lives in elegant widowhood at Coney Island, and, with the babble of green old age, deals extensively in reminiscences of the Black Crook.
